Amsterdam, December 19.

Letters from Paris of the 13th of this Month tell us, The famous Globes which the Cardinal d'Etrees has caus'd to be made at great Expence, and dedicated to the King; are at length compleatly finish'd, and were lately plac'd in two Pavillions, at the further end of the Garden of the King's Palace of Marly. They are the most finish'd Pieces of Work in their Kind, and of the largest size that ever were made; and therefore I think it worth while to send you a Print that has been transmitted hither from Paris, containing a short Description of them.

Father Coronelli a Venetian, whom the Cardinal d'Etrees pitch'd upon to make these Globes, spent above 20 Years in making them: And after he had done his Part, it was found to be an extraordinary difficult thing to make the Horizons and Meridians; For it cannot be suppos'd to have been an easie Task to make Circles of Brasse of more than 13 Foot in Diameter; nor could they have been done but by an Artist of Mr. Butterfield, (an Englishman) s Skill, who for Beauty and Perfection of Work, outdoes all Persons in France that pretend to make Mathematical Instruments. Mr. Butterfield was chosen to make the brasse Horizons and Meridians for these Globes, by Monsieur Mansart Sur-Intendant of the King's Buildings; Which he took for a great Mark of Distinction, and therefore applying himself to this Work with so much the greater Care, he did in a Year and a half's time, (being assisted by Monsieur de la Hire's Directions,) happily perform what was expected from him.

These Globes are 11 Foot, 11 Inches, and 6 Lines, in Diameter; and consequently 34 Foot, 6 Inches, and about 6 Lines, in Circumference. The Horizons and Meridians are, in the Inside, 12 Foot, 2 Inches, and 3 Lines, in Diameter; so that the Difference between the interior Diameter of the Circles, and the Diameter of the Globes, is 2 Inches and 9 Lines; whereof the Half, that is to say 1 Inch 4 Lines and $\frac{1}{2}$, is the Distance between the Surface of the Globes and the inner Surface of the Circles. The Breadth of the Horizons is 8 Inches, and by consequence their exterior Diameter is 13 Foot, 6 Inches and 3 Lines: The Thickness of them is 2 Inches, 2 Lines and $\frac{1}{2}$. The Breadth of the Meridians is 4 Inches, 11 Lines; and so their exterior Diameter is 13 Foot 1 Line: the Thickness of them is 2 Inches, 8 Lines. The Horizons are supported by 8 Pillars of Brasse, and the Meridians are carried by two Feet of the same Metal, set off with proper Ornaments. Four Consoles form the Feet of the Meridians: Between these 4 Consoles, there is plac'd under each Globe a large Compass, embellish'd with Marble and Brasse. These Compasses being divided by Degrees with the 32 Points of the Compass, shew the Declination of the Needle, which the Beginning of this Year 1704, was 9 Degrees 6 Minutes from the North towards the West.

On the celestial Globe, are plac'd all the fix'd Stars that are visible to the naked Eye, and the Constellations in which they are comprehended, according to the Ancient and Modern Astronomers, with the Tracks of some Comets. The Colour of this Globe is blue. The Stars, and the principal Circles on it, are of Brasse gilt, which makes them appear the more splendid.

The Cardinal d'Etrees has caus'd to be engrav'd on a Plate of Copper gilt, the Dedication of this Globe to the King, in these Terms:

*To the August Majesty of Lewis the Great,
the Invincible, the Happy, the Wise, the Conqueror,
Casar Cardinal d'Etrees,*

Has consecrated this Celestial Globe, on which all the Stars of the Firmament and the Planets are plac'd in the same Situation they were in at the Birth of that glorious Monarch; to preserve to Eternity a fix'd Image of that happy Position of the Heavens, under which France receiv'd the greatest Present that Heaven ever made to Mankind. M. DC. LXXXIII.

Upon the Ecliptick Line of this Globe, a sliding piece of Brasse is plac'd which carries the Image of the Sun, of the bigness that Planer appears to be when view'd from the Earth; so that it may be plac'd in all the Parts of the Firmament to which it moves in its yearly Course; which very commodiously shews its Motion, and how it approaches to or withdraws from the Stars that are in its way. This moveable Sun is of use likewise to shew why the Sun is higher at Noon sometimes than 'tis at others; whence proceeds the Change of the Seasons.

On the terrestrial Globe, the Seas are painted of a deep blue Colour, and the Land is white, that the Names of Places may appear the plainer; A Bust of the King is plac'd over the Dedication. On one Hand Victory crowns his Head, and on the other Fame attends. The Arts and Sciences, and Trophies of Arms, make the Compartment of the Dedication: which runs thus,

*To the August Majesty of Lewis the Great,
the Invincible, the Happy, the Wise, the Conqueror.
Casar Cardinal d'Etrees,*

Has consecrated this Terrestrial Globe, to render continual Homage to his Glory, and to his Heroick Virtues, by shewing the Countries in which a thousand great Actions were perform'd, by himself, or by his Orders, to the Astonishment of so many Nations whom he might have subdued to his Empire, if his Moderation had not stop'd the Course of his Conquests, and prescrib'd Bounds to his Valour, which is yet greater than his Fortune. M. DC. LXXXIII.

There are in several Places of this Globe, Cartouches, embellish'd with Figures and Ornaments suited to the Subject of the Inscriptions in them; as on the Sources of the Nile, on the Pearl Fishery, on on the way of living in several Nations, and on the Winds that blow regularly in some Parts,
